IICRD’s Approach

The International Institute for Child Rights and Development (IICRD) is a Canadian leader in community-based, national, regional and international applications of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC). Our CRC applications provide a unique “culturally grounded” approach to children’s rights that build on children’s natural resiliency (strengths) as well as the strengths of families, communities and culture. In this way, our approach effectively reaches the most vulnerable children and youth, especially indigenous children, children affected by HIV/AIDS, and children who are victims of disasters & trafficking. IICRD uses this approach to directly support communities, to influence systems that affect children, and to introduce innovative ideas to breathe life into the spirit and letter of the CRC.

One of IICRD’s four priority areas for young professionals (YPs) is working with Children at Risk – children affected by HIV/AIDS, children who are victims of sexual exploitation, children who are affected by war and disasters, and children who are vulnerable to violence. IICRD has sent over 50 young professionals to overseas placements over the past 7 years. They have worked in Bangladesh, China, India, Indonesia, Malawi, Mexico, Slovenia, South Africa, Thailand, and Venezuela. The partners to whom we send YPs are ones that IICRD has worked with in the past and share our vision and approach to children’s rights. Pre-departure, YPs receive interviews with young professional alumni from almost every placement year.

We asked our young professionals the following questions:

- As a young Canadian, what impact they believe they had on the local community, the organization they were sent to, and on wider systems during the course of their work.
- What impact the YPI placements had on them professionally and personally?
- What are they doing now in their career?
- What feedback do they have for the program?

Read on to find out what we discovered!!

Measuring our Impact

IICRD has initiated a project review and interviewed all willing past young professionals. We held 15 in-depth interviews with young professional alumni from almost every placement year.

For over seven consecutive years, IICRD has furthered its reach through Young Professionals International, funded by the Department of Foreign Affairs Canada. YPI is a significant component of IICRD’s work in the priority area of children’s rights education for professionals to protect and further rights for all children, especially the most vulnerable.

Creating a Culture of Children’s Rights:
Impact on Children, Community, Local Organizations & Systems.

YPs felt they had the most significant impact during their placement when they established direct relationships with children & youth in the community. Many are still in touch with the people they met during their stay overseas.

Janine Fernandes-Hayden worked in a foster care home in South Africa strongly impacting the lives of these children. One of the most memorable projects Andrew Wilcock worked on was when he worked directly with Roma children & communities, teaching them how to use disposable cameras to capture their daily lives.

Sarah Lalonde helped to organize a conference bringing together Annu young people with the few Annu elders who could speak their indigenous language and dance their traditional dances.

Emily McKee helped to co-ordinate workshops on domestic violence, the role of indigenous women & girls in decision-making processes. She also documented the importance of community-run schools in preserving language, culture, and identity for indigenous peoples in Thailand.

Jamie Smulders helped Empower staff prepare their presentation at the 2004 World AIDS conference in Bangkok.

YPs also play a strong role in promoting good practice & innovative ideas. Sarah Van Borek worked with vulnerable youth creating a documentary video exploring children & culture as catalysts for change.

Christine Nash assisted in facilitating children’s workshops for training on how to conduct research!!

Marnella Dragila was honoured when a report she wrote during her placement, “Article 12 in Practice: A review of Child Participation in UNICEF Country Programmes in the East Asia and Pacific Region (EAPR)” was cited extensively in another UNICEF report, “Young People in the Media” written by Elissa Shuey. Anka Raskin conducted a participatory evaluation of a center that provides vocational training to rural children. Jamie Smulders helped Empower staff prepare their presentation at the 2004 World AIDS conference in Bangkok.

Innovative ideas and good practice

YPs support our international partner organizations to implement culturally appropriate and sustainable child rights-based approaches in their programming, training and research.

One of the most significant ways that our YPs can have an impact is by reaching out to the community to help create a culture of children’s rights. Sarah Lalonde helped to organize a conference bringing together Annu young people with the few Annu elders who could speak their indigenous language and dance their traditional dances.

Emily McKee helped to co-ordinate workshops on domestic violence, the role of indigenous women & girls in decision-making processes. She also documented the importance of community-run schools in preserving language, culture, and identity for indigenous peoples in Thailand.

Jamie Smulders worked on the complex issues of supporting children and families involved in the sex trade with a focus on participation. Karla Gonzalez was involved in community work in El Pinar and el Naha, working with children to strengthen their cultural identity.

Achievement Highlights:
What the Young Professionals contributed during their placement.

Aisling Bondy was involved with Espacio Comunitario Infantil (ECI), in Mexico, teaching “A Culture for Peace” to local youth. Alex Wright became involved in cultural and linguistic revitalization activities and produced child rights education materials, including a book, In Search of Anna that links the daily lives of children in the Laguna de Sinamaica, Venezuela, to concepts in the CRC. Amy Haysom documented and presented issues relating to birth registration and reported on data in Thailand. Andrew Wilcock analyzed and reported on data in Slovenia from the Cross-Cultural Study on the Rights of the Child, worked directly with Roma children and participated in Youth Parliaments focusing on “Social Integration and the Expansion of the European Union”. Ben Crompton carried out interviews in northern Thailand with Hill tribe communities for IICRD that was showcased in the Children and Environment book project and wrote an intern handbook for IMPECT. Denise Wong, while in China, wrote: Understanding Child Rights and Culture: A Survey of Minority Child Rearing Practices in South-western China through a Child Rights Framework. Emily Paquin-Holmested travelled throughout Venezuela documenting indigenous children’s games that is currently being published by IICRD, University of Zulia and UNICEF. Erin Hetherington built, from the ground up, a peer-to-peer adolescent health project in Mexico and developed a manual in Spanish on topics relevant to health and youth. Isabella Sellar Voll helped to plan a conference that brought kids together for a day from other water communities like Laguna de Sinamaica in Venezuela. Jennifer Toth collaborated with UNICEF on work with youth groups, and doing an assessment of the relationship between child rights NGOs and government in Slovenia. Jocelyn Helland worked with Save the Children UK in Bangladesh to ensure that a child rights focus was present in the government’s Poverty Reduction Strategy. Kabita Chakraborty attended the 3rd East Asia Pacific Children and Youth People’s Forum in Seoul and produced the proceedings available at www.seapa.net/external/special/Forum3/Forum3.htm. Sandrina De Finney worked in Pauktutit, Canada and wrote a publication called, Children and Youth of the Arctic. Sarah Van Borek worked in South Africa to organize a benefit concert for a youth cultural group; create a coloring storybook project with daycare kids; & create a documentary film on the role of music in the children’s movement in South Africa. Simon Garret assisted IMPECT in Thailand and the IKAP Network organize a conference on “The Impact of Globalization, Regionalism and Nationalism on Minority People in SE Asia”. Ruth Amanuel worked in Mexico at a school for children with special needs. Her main activities were working with the children in the school, raising awareness and funds (over $17,000) and creating: www.camehuatlan.org.

Drawing on her Art, Music and Media talent...

Sarah Van Borek tells her story: “September 2003, I found myself in South Africa, on a 6-month placement with YPI and IICRD. From living and working hands-on with vulnerable children and youth in a semi-rural township (facilitating creative empowerment projects including a mini festival and colouring storybook), to then living in an urban metropolis and writing/editing a documentary video exploring a children and culture as catalysts of change, my multi-faceted experience challenged me in my view of the world and my role in it. Encountering a delightful confection of situations, from member of a grassroots Spoken Word movement to community video NGO affiliates; from playing in a 9-piece Afro-fusion band to studying dance with a Congolese superstar; making friends with people from hip-hop DJ’s to government officials, I established myself a second home. It wasn’t long before I learned that the cultural sectors of Canada and South Africa have a special agreement promoting media co-productions between the two countries. The “how’s” to the “what’s” I had been visioning began to materialize at every turn. Surrounding by such meaningful relationships, both personally and professionally, following the internship’s completion, the logical next step forward became clear: to pursue postgraduate studies…in South Africa.”

That is exactly what she has done...
Professional Impact on the YPI Alumni

Are they further ahead in their career because of their YPI experience?

Impact on Alumni

Every alumni interviewed, no matter what the huge challenges, described their experience as being very ‘powerful’ and, without prompting, all except one offered a long explanation of why they would highly recommend the program to others or why they would do it all over again in a heartbeat!

90% of interviewees are working professionally in sectors that are directly related to global issues, social justice, or children’s rights. The few that were not working professionally in these fields, were either volunteering in these fields, or were finding ways to promote children’s rights in their work in some way. For example, one alumna who has her own home-based business working in time management software, has a vision to develop goal-setting/visioning tools for young school-aged children.

Did it help them get where they are?

Individuals reported a huge professional impact on them in general. For example, four interviewees extended their placements, are still working in the country of their placement, or plan to return to the location of their original placement.

The majority of interviewees voluntarily said that the placement has both directly and indirectly helped them to get where they are in their career! Many said they would definitely not have gotten the very good jobs in their field that they did when they returned without that experience. For some, rather surprisingly, the placement introduced them to a completely new area that they are now passionate about continuing as a career. For the vast majority of interviewees, the experience allowed them to bridge into areas related to their academic background, or it allowed them to specialize in an area in their field.

Discovering new ways to work with children...

The YPI experience had a huge impact on Kathleen Smith whose placement was in Mexico, working with a special education school in Barra de Navidad called Centro de Atencion Multiple. Being the first real experience she ever working with children with disabilities, the impact was profound. During her time there, she says she was changed forever. She saw the powerful connection these children had with creative arts. There was one particularly salient moment for her: “We were putting together a Christmas pageant for the school and one girl who was to be in the pageant didn’t want to participate at first. She was a shy little girl with Down Syndrome and, like every other year, she just sat in the corner and watched everything going on around her. This Christmas, we were teaching the children a dance. One day, this girl’s mother and asked to speak to me. She told me that, incredibly, her daughter had been practicing the dance at home and today, she was going to ask to audition. This was a huge step for her daughter and she wanted to make sure the teacher understood fully how amazing this was. When I had the girl rehearse the dance, she did very well and I welcomed her into the dance. With each rehearsal, this little girl continued to blossom in her dance! When pageant night finally arrived, this shy little girl was the best dancer out of all of the children!! This was such a momentous accomplishment for her and it really spoke to me of the incredible connection between artistic expression and working with disabled children. I was so excited that I extended my work in Mexico after my term. I have recently returned to Canada with the intention of entering into Concordia’s Masters program at the Centre for the Arts and Human Development. I intend to pursue this as my career path.”

“My time overseas as a IICRD young professional changed my life; it put me on a course where I was able to make important contacts and understand the operating systems of NGOs. I know that my future consists of working in aiding street children’s participation and promoting their rights…and this is because of my experience as a young professional. It is truly a great program, worth every penny that is put into it.”

Our learning...

IMPACT OF YPI ON IICRD

Participants support and strengthen IICRD’s relationships with our International partner organizations by incorporating Canadian values of human rights and citizenship and through their research and documentation skills into child rights programming.

IICRD has also maintained a strong YP alumni. IICRD draws on this network for training and providing support to new YPs. IICRD also brings alumni in to work directly with the organization on projects. Ben Crompton carried out interviews in Northern Thailand with Hill tribe communities for IICRD that was showcased in the Children and Environment book project. Marnelle Dragila completed a literature review for IICRD’s “Meaningful Child Participation in BC Family Court Processes” project. Anka Raskin is a research assistance for IICRD’s Growing Up in Cities Canada project & Child Rights Education for Professionals project. Jamie Smulders, Julian Norris, Fadi Fadel and Fiona Scanlan have also worked with IICRD. Jocelyn Helland has become a core member of the IICRD team and is working on several projects.

IICRD CONTINUES TO LEARN...

Interviewees commended IICRD on the approach we take to the placements and noted how much they valued IICRD’s extensive pre-departure children’s rights and cross-cultural training. Others recognized IICRD for our wide-range of partnerships – we are partners with very small grassroots organizations working in remote locations, right through to the largest of the international non-profit organizations. This allows us to have many different types of placements, including very unique placements with smaller NGOs that other organizations can’t offer as easily. One of our original YP alumnus, who had been placed with a small NGO partner, has been working in the international development field for several years now and spoke a great length about the values and perspective that she gained during her placement that she continues to bring to her work to this day. She strongly encouraged IICRD to maintain this unique approach to the YPI Program.

IICRD has been successful in placing very enthusiastic young professionals. Some mentioned that their high level of enthusiasm to “do a good job” and high expectations posed a significant challenge for them when they first arrived. For some this remained a challenge for them throughout their placement. Others, however, found creative ways of channeling that energy into great projects. It is our observation that those interviewees who overcame these initial challenges had the most profound personal and professional placements! Thus, IICRD will continue to provide YP’s with opportunities to embrace their own learning while providing ongoing support and attention to safety.

Among many other things, this project gives opportunities to young Canadians who have just completed their undergraduate degree and are unemployed or under-employed. The placements allow Young Professionals to learn valuable skills and gain experience that allows them to dramatically increase their competitiveness in the career job-market.

IICRD would like to thank Foreign Affairs Canada for their ongoing support through the Young Professionals International project!
